2022 Berger Entrepreneur Bootcamp: Innovating Successfully - Making it Happen!

Expanded Summary of the Modules

1. Creating an Environment for Innovation Success.

The Berger Entrepreneur Bootcamp opens with two senior representatives of the publicprivate partnership known as the Alan B. Levan | NSU Broward Center of Innovation (the "Center""), an economic and education development engine linking the South Florida innovation ecosystem. You will first hear from NSU's Chief Innovation Officer & the Center's Executive Director, who will provide an overview of the Center's vision and its initiatives to support entrepreneurs and promote the Center's vision. Next, the Director of Broward County's Office of Economic and Small Business Development will provide an overview of Broward County's economic development initiatives, including the varied sources of public support for entrepreneurs starting or expanding their business as well as business opportunities available through small business certifications.

2. Foundations for Innovation Success: Legal Planning.

Entrepreneurs face numerous legal issues when establishing and growing their businesses. At the outset, founders must choose an appropriate business entity (corporation, limited liability company (LLC), or other organizational form), agree upon how their organization will be governed, craft the core organizational documents, and address other important legal issues, including employment law and related matters pertinent to their workforce and independent contractors. Additionally, a start-up's lawyers must navigate the Florida Bar's ethics rules governing potential conflicts of interest that can arise as founders, their companies, and other stakeholders work together to grow a business. Our speakers will explain these crucial legal issues and provide founders with a knowledge base to intelligently engage with their legal and business advisors on legal planning matters.

3. Foundations for Innovation Success: Business Planning and Financing.

The Small Business Administration describes the business plan as "an essential roadmap for business success." As start-ups transition from an "idea" to the implementation and actualization of that idea, a business plan serves as a tool for founders to address the necessary building blocks for a successful launch, including industry know-how, due diligence, management team and staffing requirements, budgeting, and product pricing. Our speakers will provide guidance on creating a business plan and other presentation materials, such as pitch decks. And because adequate capital is crucial to business success, our speakers will also review the various types of equity and debt financing start-ups commonly use, the respective financial, managerial, and strategic risks associated with each financing type, basic securities law compliance issues, legal ethics, and other practical considerations pertinent to valuing and positioning a business for a financing round or a future exit transaction.

4. Creating Pathways for Innovation Success in Under-Served and Economically Disadvantaged Communities.

All start-ups face difficult challenges when starting and growing their businesses. All too often, these common challenges lead to business failure. Start-ups and their founders in under-served and economically disadvantaged communities face those same challenges, and often more, that may result from one or more of the following: restricted access to capital, limited managerial experience and/or trained workers, and inadequate support systems and networks. Our panelists will engage in a round-table discussion identifying the unique challenges these founders face as well as existing and desired resources, strategies, and initiatives to create or enhance pathways for innovation success in these communities.

5. Innovation Success through Intellectual Property.

The second day of the Bootcamp opens with an overview of how intellectual property (IP), broadly defined, is critical to a start-up's success. In developing new products or enhancing existing products, a market orientation combined with an understanding of IP rights can focus the process of transforming ideas into profitable new products and business lines. Three panels of speakers will then spend the balance of the morning and the first part of the afternoon discussing the various categories of intellectual property and related matters: (i) Copyrights and Trademarks; (ii) Patents; and (iii) Trade Secrets, Contractual Rights, IP Licensing, & Employment Considerations. In addition to explaining these IP concepts and legal rights, each of our IP speakers will provide real world insights into creating, monetizing, and defending IP rights and will also discuss the Professional Responsibility Rules of the Florida Bar and the United States Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO) relevant to securing and enforcing these intellectual property rights.

- A. Copyrights and Trademarks. Copyrights provide protection for "original works of authorship," including literary, musical, pictorial, and other creations, and give the owner the exclusive right to reproduce, publicly display or perform, and distribute their works as well as prepare derivative works. Trademarks and service marks provide businesses with a powerful means to differentiate themselves from their competitors in the marketplace. In addition to the exclusive rights that copyrights and trademarks provide, owners can further monetize their copyrights and trademarks by licensing them to others.
- B. Patents. Through the exclusive rights granted by patent laws for a limited number of years, a patent owner has the potential to gain a dominant market position with regard to the scope of the invention. Patents provide their owners control over the making, using, selling, or importing of an invention. Patent owners may also license others to use their patents. Our speakers will discuss the creation and enforcement of patent rights, including ethical and legal constraints that lawyers must consider under the USPTO rules as they counsel clients on translating research into a patented process, machine, article of manufacture, or composition of matter without unintentionally destroying the exclusivity in the patent or diminishing its value.

C. Trade Secrets, Contractual Rights, IP Licensing, & Employment Considerations. In addition to the rights granted under copyright, trademark, and patent laws, most businesses have valuable intellectual property that can be protected as trade secrets or which can be protected through written contracts (for example, non-disclosure agreements (NDAs), covenants not to compete, non-solicitation agreements, etc.). In addition, the law affords individuals "publicity" rights in their names, images, and likenesses, which are valuable assets that can be monetized through license agreements. Finally, our speakers will discuss important IP related practical and legal ethics issues that arise in the context of hiring or terminating employees.

6. Being a Successful Innovator: A Discussion with Founders.

This panel of start-up founders will share their experiences in launching and growing their companies. Having "been there and back," they will provide insight into the practical challenges they've faced, the learnings and wisdom gained from those challenges, and the sacrifices and rewards along the way. Their insights into lessons they learned and the hidden secrets they wished they had known should be of great value to all founders and potential founders embarking on a similar journey.
