Physicians are prescribing peptides, hormone replacement therapy, and other treatments that largely fall outside direct FDA approval. Regulation has not kept pace with clinical practice. The market is predominantly cash-pay and elective, and patient demand is driven by direct-to-consumer marketing. The 7th Annual Jay A. Ziskind Health Law Lecture takes a practitioner-focused approach to this landscape. The Ziskind Lecture pairs health lawyer and founder of the Center for Health and Wellness Law, Barbara J. Zabawa, J.D., M.P.H., Associate Professor of Law at the UMKC School of Law, with longevity physician Luis Martinez, M.D., M.P.H., President of XanoGene Clinics and co-founder of the Clinical Peptide Society.

Together, they will examine the regulatory status of these therapies, the scope-of-practice and standard-of-care obligations they trigger, the conflicts of interest they can create, and the consent and documentation practices that reduce liability exposure for prescribing physicians.
